

12th Security Council Open Debate on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict: 9 November 2011 On 9 November 2011, the Security Council held its 12th Open Debate on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict, focusing this session on how to enhance accountability for violations of international humanitarian law (IHL) and international human rights law. In advance of the debate, Security Council President Portugal held a 1 November meeting organized with OCHA on the role of the Council in enforcing accountability for massive violations of human rights.

Accountability and protecting civilians

During the debate, over forty Member States remarked on key issues highlighted at the 1 November meeting. These topics included mechanisms for ensuring individual criminal responsibility, improved fact-finding and reparation for victims. Opening the debate, Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon reiterated that the promotion of accountability for violations of IHL was one of the five core challenges identified in his 2009 and 2010 reports on the protection of civilians.

RtoP prominently featured in the debate

Many Member States took this opportunity to reiterate their support for the Responsibility to Protect, recalling the crucial role of the international community in taking appropriate measures to prevent and halt mass atrocity crimes. Several States highlighted the relevance of the norm to the debate, including

Norwa

y which reminded that civilian protection should not be seen “in isolation” from the Responsibility to Protect.

Guatemala

noted that the commitment to RtoP at the 2005 World Summit was “one of the most outstanding achievements obtained” at the meeting and recalled that the second pillar of RtoP meant that governments were responsible for seeking international assistance when unable to fulfill their responsibilities

Though many speakers stressed that national authorities bore the primary responsibility to protect, the role of international actors was prominently featured regarding the deteriorating situation in Syria. Many Member States expressed serious concern and called for further action from a number of actors to protect civilians. The called on Syria to end the violence and admit UN monitors while Nigeria asked that Syria comply with the Arab League agreement. Several States denounced the lack of action by the Security Council, including Japan,

United Kingdom

Germany

,

France

, and the United States

.

Brazil

's concept of "Responsibility while protecting"

Recognizing that the responsibility to protect had been a milestone in improving the protection of population from mass atrocities, Brazil took the debate as an opportunity to offer a new perspective on the question of the use of force under the RtoP framework. Brazil mentioned that they would soon circulate a concept paper on the idea that the international community, while exercising its responsibility to protect, "must demonstrate a high level of responsibility while protecting". Ambassador Maria Luiza Ribeiro Viotti emphasized that both concepts "should evolve together, based on an agreed set of fundamental principles, parameters and procedures" of which he mentioned a few (see full speech

here

):

"Prevention is always the best policy. It is the emphasis on preventive diplomacy that reduces the risk of armed conflict and the human costs associated with it;

Brazil

's emphasis on the need to "do no harm" was echoed by a few States, particularly in the aftermath of NATO's operations in Libya which generated much debate and controversy. Russia and supported the proposed concept paper, with China cautioning that, "there should be no political motives or purposes involved, including regime change." South Africa and India also reflected on lessons learned from Libya, emphasizing that civilians should not be harmed and alternative agendas should not be followed in the name of protecting civilians.

China

Read a

summary of statements

from the 12

th

Open Debate on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict

See ICRtoP's full analysis of the 12th Open Debate